Helping You Help Yourself

A vice president loses his job due to a budget cut. Despite excellent qualifications, his youthful, unkempt appearance hurts his chances of finding an advanced position elsewhere. He turns to R.C. Consulting for guidance, and is soon hired at a higher salary than before.

A former executive from another country is unfamiliar with American business culture, an obvious impediment to starting his own management consulting firm. R.C. Consulting improves his image and helps him adapt to corporate expectations.

A talented executive is fired because of miscommunication by his employer. It was not his fault, but through personal coaching from R.C. Consulting, he learns new communication techniques and secures a top position with another company.

"Individuals serving in high-level leadership roles without an executive coach are standing naked in the face of high-risk/high-reward challenges. R.C. Consulting uses a holistic approach which amplifies the strengths of both individuals and teams. The tools, techniques and counsel provided by R.C. Consulting have enhanced my performance to deliver the expected results."

The job market is more challenging than ever, even for educated professionals at the upper end of the earning spectrum. Companies seeking the most qualified talent have many options. While experience remains the most important consideration, other factors such as a positive physical appearance, body language and speaking skills can give a candidate the competitive edge.

With almost three decades of experience in coaching, training, teaching and resume writing, R.C. Consulting is a nationally recognized leader in preparing mid- to upper-level executives to exceed expectations. More than an executive placement firm, R.C. Consulting recognizes the critical role one's personal image plays in networking, management, negotiations, sales and interviewing, and helps clients improve those areas through intensive, one-on-one coaching.

"We are a global career development firm," says Romona Camarata, M.S.Ed., founder and president. "We want to understand each client's pattern of behavior. We approach each client as a psychologist would. There are often emotional issues that need to be addressed, especially when someone suddenly loses a job."

With a master's degree in education and credentials in a wide range of business-related disciplines, Camarata bridges the gap between personal and professional issues in ways that can mean the difference between success and failure. She is a Global Career Development Facilitator, a Master Career Development Professional (MCDP) - NCDA, a Certified Career Coach, a Certified Administrator of Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI), and much more. When appropriate, she utilizes professional video services to enable clients to see how others perceive them.

"As a result of my several-month engagement with my new 'coach,' I feel more empowered, confident, knowledgeable and positive about my future prospects," says Duke Haddad, president of Duke Haddad Associates, LLC, in Indianapolis. "R.C. Consulting works closely with you, understands what makes you tick and shows you in a collaborative fashion how to generate outcomes that you desire."

A former senior advisor for a New York-based career management firm, Camarata has received many industry awards and has written for numerous books and other publications. Besides her proven track record with clients, she has proudly volunteered for career day events in Indianapolis and for various nonprofit organizations, including The National Society of Hispanic MBAs (NSHMBA) and The National Career Development Association's Mentor Program.

"Executives impact the economic development of an area or an industry," Camarata says. "Leadership comes from the top down. We are moving mountains one person at a time."
